share their vision with their team members. Mr. Taylor demonstrated the merits of maintaining an energetic and positive mindset. Mr. Taylor explained the concept of self-proclamation, meaning the positive things we speak of ourselves, will in fact come true. Mr. Taylor expressed the need for leaders to constantly self-evaluate themselves to ensure they are performing at the level they expect others to perform at. Leaders must act in order for things to improve. He explained that throughout the day, opportunities come, and that people can either grow from those opportunities, or just go through them. Mr. Taylor identified three P's in life: purpose, passion, and pride. He stated that as leaders, your purpose is to serve other people. He explained that your passion is your fuel or your energy to accomplish that purpose. He further explained that as leaders, you should take pride in those you have the opportunity to impact or serve. He explained the different roles of leaders, managers, and doers. In closing, he explained that a great leader values every relationship, puts their team members first, clearly shares their vision, challenges their team, and provides the appropriate feedback.
