What leve	el of training is being proposed?
	Individual-level development . Check this box if this development opportunity is proposed for individual-level training, even in findividuals will complete the same training. If approval is given by a supervisor, training may be completed during work participat opportun developn	eam-level development. Check this box if the development is team-based. Teams of individuals may receive training or te in problem solving, or planning and improvement activities together. These team-based advances are team training nities for groups of individuals across campus who need training to improve their work or work better together. Each nent activity must have deliverable and measurable outcomes. Please check below to designate if this will be an Intrateam or an Interteam Advance.
1 0 1	Intrateam Advance. Focuses on the development of a team of individuals who normally work together. An intrateam advance may include off-site training, bringing experts to campus to train a team in area of need, meetings or retreats away from the office to work collaboratively to find solutions for long-standing problems, or teams that meet on or off-site training on how to work more effectively together. Proposals for an intrateam team advance are intended to come from a group of faculty and staff who normally work together (i.e. members of a department within a division, college, or school). Each proposal must include the agreement and support of the group's supervisor or manager and the supervisor or manager must be a part of the Intratem Advance.
,	Interteam Advance. Focuses on connecting people across areas outside normal working relationships. Ideally, a group will include individuals who have a desire to improve MGA by acquiring a specific skill or learning to work together in new ways. Each interteam advance may include both faculty and staff who come from multiple areas of campus. For example an interteam advance may focus on: improving assessment practices across divisions, integrating advising practice with academic
