Staying Safe and Healthy While Abroad

When you travel to another country, you may not be used to the local environment, food, and water. It's important to take steps to stay safe and healthy while abroad. This includes getting vaccinated, practicing good hygiene, and being aware of your surroundings.

Before you travel, make sure you are up to date on all recommended vaccinations. This includes routine vaccines like measles, mumps, and rubella, as well as travel-specific vaccines like hepatitis A and typhoid. Consult your doctor or a travel clinic for more information. Practice good hygiene by washing your hands frequently with soap and water, and avoiding contact with sick people. Be aware of your surroundings and avoid areas with high crime rates or political unrest. If you have any health concerns while abroad, seek medical attention immediately.
